

Prompt Coach

Guiding Motto — 2026-09-22

“AI is only as good as the prompt you give it — or the person behind the prompt.”

What this means for the product

This is the thesis Prompt Coach is built around: nearly every frustrating AI interaction traces back to a specific, fixable gap in how the prompt was written — missing context, no accuracy check, no format specified, no room for the AI to ask a clarifying question. Prompt Coach's rules engine exists because each of its 20 rules targets exactly one such gap, coaching the person in the moment instead of asking them to already know better.

Where the motto has a limit

Not every objection to AI is a prompting-skill gap, and the motto shouldn't be read as a universal claim. A user-research interview (physics professor, 2026-09-17, recorded in docs/INTERVIEW-NOTES.md) surfaced two counterexamples no amount of better prompting fixes: the token/setup cost of customizing AI for a task, and an explicit ethical or pedagogical refusal to delegate thinking at all. The motto explains why Prompt Coach helps the “skill gap” half of frustrated users — and is honest about where that help runs out.
